Will Shift To Russia

Despatches from Berlin show extra confidence of Austro-Germans in ability to complete tremendous drive against the Russians in Galicia by capturing the capital, Lemberg. After battling for weeks to crush the initial sweep of the French, and being farther from the channel ports than they were ten months ago, the Germans are completely reversing their strategy, and will make an attempt to crush the Russian offensive. It is reported in this connection that the Kaiser is in supreme command in the Galician campaign.

The Allies are appreciably concerned and are by no means confident that the Russians will be able to hold Lemberg against the Austro-Germans.

It is 50 miles south of Scutari and is on the bay of Durazzo, an inlet of the Adriatic Sea. The purpose of the move by Serbia is not yet clear, unless it be to detract the attention of the small Turkish influence in Albania from the Italian maneuvers farther north.—Ed. Gard. Isl.)

The Price Of Bulgaria

Washington—Bulgaria's price for entering the war is practically impossible to pay, according to statements made in diplomatic circles here yesterday.

The Trouble With Greece

The only way Greece will consent to enter the war will come from an arrangement whereby she may send a land force through Bulgaria to fight Turkey. This movement would have to be through a strip of land which separates the Hellenes from the country of the Moslems. Bulgaria will not consent to any such move unless she gets cessions of territory from Greece on the Aegean, from Serbia on the west and from Roumania on the Black Sea, in addition to a share in whatever partitioning is to be done with Turkey in Europe.

What London Thinks

London thinks that the suggestion that Bulgaria would throw her strength to Germany in case Greece should attempt to despatch troops across her territory is merely bluff.

The French have made notable advances in upper Alsace, driving their positions to the Fecht river. In Woevre the Font der Veal has been regained.

North of Arras the German offensive has been checked, while counter attacks by the French have advanced the lines around Souchez.

The President And Mexico

Singular Despatch, This

The British fleet has taken refuge from German submarines on the north east coast of Imbros Island. (The strangeness of this statement will be appreciated when it is remembered that Imbros island is situated in the Aegean Sea and belongs to Turkey. This is the first intimation that Germany had any submarines in that locality. These must have come from the Adriatic.—Ed. Gard. Isl.)

On three occasions the Turks were successful in exploding mines under British vessels in supposedly secure refuge.

Austrian Submarine Torpedoes Italian

Rome—An Italian submarine, while cruising off Pola, the Austrian naval port, yesterday was sighted by an Austrian submarine and the latter let fly a torpedo which found its true mark. No bodies reported as having been recovered.

(Here follows an unintelligible despatch about a meeting between the British steamer Turnwell and the British steamer Stafford; explosions in the "hull"; somebody blowing up the Turnwell, which was badly damaged although still afloat, and the crew arriving safely into Milford Haven. This afternoon's wireless, it is hoped, may supply some key to this remarkable scramble of information.)
